No. 1, a mighty animal from Texas almost reached the Broadway throng He went up 10th Avenue and turned east in 55th Street. Traffic made way for him with more alacrity than t does for a fire engine. Sidewalks were vacated as if by magic, and people in automobiles sped away. Children van into the nearest shops or doorways and the bull had things his own way until he had passed Eighth Avenue.

There a clever pair of chauffeurslobody knows whether they were owboys once or not-evoked the heers of second-story spectators by he way they handled the situation each had a taxicab instead of a concho, and each made it do a roncho's duty.

One taxi speeded up and flanked he bull on one side, the other flanked ilm on the other, and then the two taxis swerved toward each other unil their hoods nearly touched each ther. The bull jumped over the baricade and went on toward Broadway.
